The Philosophy of Religion subject area in the Faculty of Divinity has a strong tradition reaching back to the beginning of the 20th century.

Later, Cambridge developed a style of teaching and research in this area in which the strengths and importance of both analytic and continental styles of Philosophy of Religion were affirmed. More recently the subject area has developed a new specialism in Jewish Philosophy; and it works closely with those teaching Islamic and Indian thought in the faculty whilst also continuing its historic collaborations with Christian theology.

The University Teaching Officers in this subject area are Professor Sarah Coakley, Professor Douglas Hedley, Professor Catherine Pickstock, and Dr Daniel Weiss. A wider community of senior scholars also working in Cambridge in this field take an active role in research seminars, supervision and occasional lectures.

Graduate Study Day

27th November 2017, 9am-4pm
Room 7, Faculty of Divinity

There are many ways to think philosophically about silence. We may say that we fall silent, yet, according to Meister Eckhart: ‘Nothing creaturely is so like God as silence.’

Silence as a medium or discipline characterizes many of the prayerful or meditative, musical, and ritual practises that shape Abrahamic, Buddhist, and Hindu traditions.

This study day will bring together Divinity graduate students and faculty to think philosophically about silence.
